The reference to a ministate and particularly the pledge to cease attacks against Israel could lead to heated controversy in Palestinian nationalist ranks.

The PLO's official goal, laid out in the movement's charter, is the creation through armed struggle of a state over the whole of Palestine including present-day Israel.

A statement last month by the PLO representative in France saying the movement would cease hostile acts against Israel and recognize the Jewish state de facto in exchange for a "mini-state" led to sharp reaction in Beirut. The PLO's foreign affairs spokesman accused information media of distoring the attitude of some commando leaders and one commando group asked that the Paris delegate be put on trial. In his statement, Abu Lyad

JEDDAH, Jan. 6-The Carro-based Arab armaments vencure, the Arab Organization for Industrialization, will not be dissolved if a peace treaty is signed with Israel, the organization's new board chairman Sheikh Faisal ibn Sultan Al-Qassimi said here.

UNRWA staff warns

of strike next month

Prime Minister Zulfikar Ali Bhutto's Peoples Party told gruesome stories of torture and confinement in separate interviews on Pakistan Television late last week.

The two said they were imprisoned after they earned Bhutto's displeasure two years ago, when he was still prime minister.

On Friday night, Amin Butt, a former member of the Punjab Provincial Assembly said his young children could not recognize him when he returned from 21 months in the Dulai concentration camp. He said he was starved continuously for four to five days at intervals and tortured with hot iron bars.

Half Mad

"When I returned home from the detention my 70year-old father had died and my wife had turned half mad," he said.

"All that Bhutto's federal security force men wanted was that I should give in writing and then announce personally that I fully supported him," he said. Iftikhar Ahmad Tari, exminister of the Punjab Provincial government who was dismissed for his opposition to Bhotto, also told of torture during 22 months in the Dulai camp.

He said he was told that his wife and children would be eliminated if he did not announce his support of Bhutto. camp to seek his support.

"Bhutio wanted me to kill Mr. Khar and Sadiq Hussain Qureshi, former two governors of Punjab who had started opposing Mr. Bhutto openly. if I wanted to live alive in this world," Tari said.

Both men pointed out the the cells in the camp, which measured seven feet by seven feet, where they said three to five persons were kept huddled together for months.

reveals hopes for premiership TEL AVIV, Jan. 6 (UPI) -Former Army Chief of Staff Mordechai Gur Friday blasted his government for misreading Egypt's real intentions in the peace talks with Israel.

In his first interview as a private citizen, Gur told the state-run television he will be joining the opposition Labor Party Sunday and admitted his long-range ambition is to become a prime minister. Gur received his discharge papers Wednesday.

He said Egypt's inability to break away from the rest of the Arab world, apparent even before President Anwar Sadat's visit to Jerusalem, became even more evident after his speech to the Knesset.

But the government of Prime Minister Menahem Begin rushed into the talks without adequate preparation and on the basis of "assumptions and illusions," Gur said.

Sino-Soviet qualms

By Dan Fisher

MOSCOW-Armored personnel carriers raced across the frozen Amur River, discharging Russian troops on the other side. The Russians dressed in hodded white winter coats and pants, stormed ashore, machineguns ready.

The scene was Khabarovsk. the biggest city in the Soviet Far East, and the place where Western travelers here get their closest look at the Sino-Soviet border. The disputed border with China begins near the opposite bank.

The military exercise was witnessed by some of those Western travelers. It underlined the continuing tension along the 4,500-mile-long border separating the two countries that more than ever dominate U.S. strategic thinking.
The Soviet-Chinese border

has been called the most hostile and heavily armed in the world.

One end to the vast oil deposits of the Middle East. The other is a ferry ride from Japan.

The Soviet Union reportedly has between 800,000 and one million troops, armed with offensive nuclear weapons, stationed along the border. It also has six tank divisions there and a large contingent of combat aircraft.

According to the International Institute for Strategic Studies, 70 of the 136 main force divisions of Peking's People's Liberation Army are deployed in northern China, facing their vastly better equipped Soviet counterparts.

The two sides beam a constant stream of hostile propaganda at each other by shortwave radio and in some cases loudspeaker.

The heavily armed border stands as both a symbol of the nearly two-decade-ol drift between the world's two major Communist powers and as a potentially dangerous flashpoint where what has been largely an ideological and diplomatic confrontation can erupt at any time into a military one.

The border situation is of increasing concern to the United States at a time when Washington is trying to complete an important Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty with the Soviets after establishing diplomatic relations with China. Open hostilities have broken out on the disputed border before-most recently last May 9 when Soviet troops crossed into Chinese territory in what Moscow later apologized for as a "mistaken" violation of the bor-

The most serious clash came nearly 10 years ago, in March 1969, when, according to conflicting accounts, as many as 240 Russian troops and up to 800 Chinese died in two pitched battles over a small, disputed island in the Ussur River near Khabarovsk called Damansky by the Soviets and Chenpao by the Chinese.

At that time, according to several reports, the Kremlin testered on the brink of launching a pre-emptive military strike against China to wipe out its southern neighbor's budding nuclear capability. Moscow has denied such reports as "nonsensical" and "a lie from beginning to end."

Seven months after the Ussuri River clashes, the Soviet Union and China began negotiations over the disputed border. The talks have dragged on ever since, with no end in sight. The latest round, which opened just days before last May's incident, broke off last summer.

Contrary to popular assumptions, the inhabitants along the Soviet side of the Sino-Soviet border tend not to be descendants of the distinctly oriental tribes that originally populated the area in the 13th and 14th centuries. Particularly in the most sensitive border areas, they are predominantly Russian.

The Czars sent Russians to colonize Siberia and the Far East beginning in the 17th century, and their Soviet successors are doing much the same today as they try to find the manpower to develop the desolate, but mineral-rich land.

The Khabarovsk region, for example, is 35 per cent Russian. The city itself sits in a wide valley between two low mountain ranges and has a decidedly European flavor. "When you walk down the streets of Khaharovsk," commented one recent visitor, "you feel almost like you're in Moscow."

Soviet troops stationed along the Chinese border also tend to be Europeans - ostensibly because of the Kremlin's desire to give them a greater appreciation for the international flavor of their country.

The current Sino-Soviet border dates from the middle of the 19th century when Czarist Russia took advantage of the weakening Ching Dynasty to expand its control to the easternmost sections of what is today Siberia and the Soviet Far East.

China now refers to the lands it turned over at that time as its "lost territories." In all, some 580,000 square miles of land are involved.

Former Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev used to sneer that the Chinese wanted a return to "the frontiers of the Old Testament." His successors take the same line.

"It is simply absurd to refer to acts from the history of ancient and medieval empire in order to prove one's right to any territory, because the past has nothing to do with the established boundaries of modern states," a Soviet commentator argued recently.

Still, when Moscow tried last February to patch up the Sino-Soviet rift, Peking replied that it would do so only if the Kremlin acknowledged the "unequalness" of those Czarist treaties. Another precondition was that the Soviet Union pull its troops back from the disputed borders.

How serious the Chinese are about reclaiming the "lost territories" is debatable. A top Soviet party official told Western visitors recently that such a move is inevitable sooner or later. (LAT)

New threat to South Africa

JOHANNESBURG -

South Africa, already under the threat of U.N. economic sanctions and braced for an escalating guerrāla war, is confronted with the prospect of losing its traditional source of crude oil from strife-torn Iran. Some 90 per cent of South Africa's imported fuel was shipped from Iran before the un-

Now. South Africa is pa ing what one government official called "premia" prices for oil from undisclosed other sources - a trend that could become permanent in the face of threats by Iran's new leaders to hak all shipments to the white-ruled nation and Israel.

"If the new regime in Iran is pro-Communist the effect on our country will be more serious than if they were pro-West," Economy Minister J.N. ious than if they were Heunis said Thursday night. Heunis, reacting to reported statements in the South African press by newly appointed Iranian Premier Shahpour Bakhtiar that the Tehran government may stop oil exports, predicted that South Africa's balance of trade could be "seriously harmed by such a move.

Already, a sixth of South Africa's $7,000 million import bill is spent on oil, vital for the country's booming mines. industries, farms and the armed forces fighting a 12-year war in neighboring Namibia.

To meet the threat of Iranian embargo, South Africa has stepped up the search for offshore reserves drafted contingency plans for nationwide fuel rationing if needed and held talks with other oil pro-

South African government Commerce Secretary Tjaart Van Der Walt who heads a committee due to meet Monday next on the pil crisis, told the "Financial Hall" weekly magazine that bound Africa was now buying an international snot markete where "a nal spot markets where "a lot of oil is lying around."

Meanwhile, a ration program devised in 1973 — based on coupons limit users - is being kept in cold storage until the committee reports on measures needed to reduce fuel consumption. The committee is to report to the government in two weeks.

Most energy experts favor voluntary cutbacks - speed restrictions, reduced gasoline station hours, fixed days when fuel cannot be sold - arguing that two-thirds of all oil burned in the country is by owners of cars and truck: Less than ten per cent of energy used by a mmerce and industry is oil, mainly for heating. Most use coa', and others can quickly convert from oil to coal, industry sources say. A week before the committee was to meet for the first time, newspapers here reported that a second exploring oil rig called the Sedco 708 was on its way from the North Sea to begin drilling off the west coast of South Africa. The only other rig drilling for pockets of offshore oil has had no success. South Africa's only local oil supplies - less than ten per cent of its needs - is processed from coal at a stateowned plant. Plans are afoot to build further plants, experts predict that with the country's abundance of coal deposits South Africa could be producing a third of its estimated needs by 1984. Iromically, Iran has a 17.5 per cent stake in the Natref refinery that converts coal to oil. Strong ties have long existed between South Africa and Iran since the Shah spent part of World War II in exile here. The threat to South Africa's traditional oil supplies comes at a time when the white minority government here has been warned of a possible United Nations economic boycott.

The world body, pressing for independence in Namibia and demanding radical changes to segregationist laws at home, has threatened to apply sanctions as it did with Rhodesia 10 years before.

South Africa has now agreed to United Nations-supervised elections, but further demands from Communist and Third World states are expected

Moreover ,there has been no sign of a lull in guerrilla offensives, where military sources predict an escalation in coming months. "Die Vaderland," a pro-government newspaper, warned in an editorial Friday that South Africa should be braced for further onslaughts. South Africans are anxiously watching developments in Iran from where Premier Bakhtiar was reported as saying this week that an oil embargo might be ordered against South Africa's racial policies and its links with Israel, also dependent on Iranian Oil.

But oil industry sources here assert that not only South Africa and white South Africans would suffer.—(AP)

Peking keeps options open

Vice Premier Teng Hsiao hands on this matter," ping made it clear Friday that industrial modernization is an all-absorbing program and that China will not be diverted by military adventures either in

This was the impression which came out of the 74-yearold Chinese leader's first press conference with visiting American correspondents here.

Teng indicated that the Chinese, having put their minds to it, intend to explore every opportunity for talks with the Taiwanese, including Nationalist President Chiang Ching-kuo, leading to political reunification of the island with the Mainland.

"So far as I am personally concerned, my hope is that this goal can be achieved this year, he said.

Teng repeated what he has said on other occasions: How the Taiwan issue is settled remains a Chinese internal affair, and normalization of refations with the United States was based on American understanding of this position.

But he is inclined to seek peaceful solution, Teng said, while holding open the option of employing other means. With unusual delicacy - he is usually more blunt — he didn't say this meant the use of force. He explained that he had to have this arrow in the Chinese quiver, even if it wasn't used, or the prospects of a peaceful settlement would be hampered. "We cannot tie our

Teng renewed his invitation to Senator Barry Goldwater, the most adamant opponent of normalization, to visit China. but said he would not talk with him on the Taiwan question, or any other, during his Washington visit which begins Jan. 29.

There was some surprise

here over Teng's optimistic estimate of the speed with which he hopes Taiwan will "come back." as he phrased it, to the motherland. In referring to Chiang Ching-kuo, president of the Republic of China, Teng did not employ that title, nor did he use any expression of abuse, as in the past. He called him simply "Mr. Chiang."

The surprise at the 1979 timetable stemmed from fact that Chiang, son of the late Gen. Chiang Kai-shek, has shown no public desire to speak to the Communists, for whom he reserves more uncomplimentary epithets. But analysts here observe that the Chinese have, over the years, shown a capacity for compromise unusual in Westerners. The Communists and Nationalists got together in the 1920s, the 1930s and the 1940s, so nothing can be ruled out. What came through most predominantly from the hourlong meeting with the 27 visiting Americans was Teng's preoccupation with making Chica an industrially modern country by the start of the 21st century. He emphasized the importance of the recently concluded Sino-Japanese peace treaty and American normalization. He said they open opportunities in could be beneficial to all. They chid ed Vietnam for showing ingratitude to those who helped them in the Vietnam war but there was none of the tough fighting talk one expects to hear from one ally going to the defense of another.

A robust evening's entertainment

The Sandi Equity Theater is presenting this year its third Pantomime and it has selected "Sing a Song of Sixpence" one of some 800 scripts written by Norman Robbins.

The director is Sylvia Tempie, who has been successful both in acting and directing in Jeddah over a number of years. Allen Duce designed the basic sets, all of which are very attractive and the execution was performed by a very large band of helpers. Indeed more than 100 keen people have been involved since October in getting the show on the road, Costumes show the practised hand and clever imagination of Heather Bond and her four wardrobe makers. Lively music is provided by Vivian Brown and a near group.

At a preview on Friday all the ingredients of a robust evening's entertainment were assembled for the dress rehearsai. There is good music, dancing, comedy, dramatic pense, a touch of horror, some charming childrens' performances and so on. The theater can seat 400 and it ought to be a sell out.

For the benefit of readers who are not familiar with Pantomime it ought to be explained that although it had its origins in the seventeenth century Italian Commedia del Arte, it has now evolved into a uniquely English form popular entertainment young people of all ages.

The plots, traditionally based upon nursery rhymes or fairy stories, are not so important as the stock comic and dramatic characters, of widows and ugly sisters always played by men and charming princes always played by shapely girls with good singing voices. There are always clowns and some kind of supernatural perwizards.

and good fairies, and more often than not a horse, a goose or a cow with the power of human speech. The chorus and dancers are provided by a company of soldiers, pirates peasants, lords and ladies and so on, depending upon the sense of the fable.

The main purpose of Pantomime is to prove that true love always overcomes obstacles and that virtue invariably triumphs over evil however hopeless the situation appears. This of course only happens in the fairyland of Pantomime. which is a wonderful adventure for children and an exercise in nostalgia for their pa-

"Sing a song of Sixpence" is taken from the nursery rhyme of that name, in which a pie containing "four and twenty blackbirds" was baked for the king. London through the centuries. Most of the rhymes were libellous and first appeared in satirical, political broadsheets. The children took them up without knowing the double meaning. "A Frog he would a Wooing go", for instance, is a satire on the extravagant love life of King Charles II and "Ring a Ring of Roses" is a song about the Great Plague ("Tishoo, Tishoo, We all fall down").

This ambivalence of Pantomime (a sophistication and double entendre of comic dialogue and at the same time a simplicity of essential moral values in spite of the complications of plot and counter plot, mistaken identity, and so on) continues to be a feature of the contemporary English theater of comedy, where important players are enthusiastic to appear for the short Pantomime season as a break from their other acting

The thing which always appeals to children is that they are expected to take part by identifying the villain and shouting a warning to the hero, joining in a special action song, or responding noisily to a code word, pronounced, apparently out of context, by the comic widow. Children love Pantomime, the wonder and the terror of it, because they ee every moral issue in a very clear light. Adults are often surprised, having been dragged there by the children, that they enjoyed it even more than the little ones, if such a thing were possible at all. (The same is true of Punch and Judy, from the same, antique, Italian source).

Frei Otto concept The tent as a shelter for man

Roof for an antique carron sel for the Smithsonian Institution in Washington.

By Mary Jo McConahay An exhibition of the work of Frei Otto and his teams from 1955 to the present was on display at King Faisal University in Dammam, Otto is a builder who has taken the traditional concept of the tent as a shelter for man, elevated, expanded and in some cases simplified it into a phantasmagoric array of small to massive structures. The exhibit, a series of blown-up photos of works and models, all identified and explained, is a history of a man who believes in using ultramodern technology to achieve maximum lightness and extreme strength in his roofs and buildings.

In fact, Otto's designs cannot atways be called buildings. Often they consist simply of huge square surfaces stretched and anchored at strategic points. The thin membranes become saddle-shaped roofs for temporary and permanent shelters, peaked or winged tents, that can resemble spider webs,

Struggling with reforestation

CAMP KENANGAN, Indonesia - Bouncing along a dirt road that winds through tropical rain forests, the Weyerhaeuser Company's pickup truck suddenly emerges into a large. cleared area dotted with tiny pine trees.

Indonesians wielding machetes wade through the underbrush, hacking at the weeds and vines that constantly threaten to return and choke off the young trees growth.

Halfway around the world from its home base in Tacoma, Wash. Weyerhaeuser has been introducing Caribbean pine trees into the forest wilderness of Kalimantan, the former "Borneo.

It is a controversial experiment that has cast the giant "Timber company as the environmental good guy in an emo-"tional debate between conservationists and commercial interests. Virtually alone among the more than 400 foreign and "domestic timber concessionaries in Kalimantan, Weyerhaeuser has been planting new trees, testing the soil and warning of the disastrous effects of uncontrolled timber operations.

Elementary as reforestation of timberlands may seem to "conservationists, it is a novel idea that has yet to gain wide acceptance in Indonesia and the rest of the under-developed a world, where the last great untapped wood reserves lie,

What happens here is, therefore, being closely watched by rorestry experts, who warn that tropical rain forests in West Africa Brazil's Amazon Basin and other parts of Southeast 'Asia are among the most threatened resources on the planet. Economic and political pressures here have been pushing in a direction that worries the environmentalists - toward accelerated cutting and massive exploitation of the 100 million acres (40 million hectares) of standing timber on Kali-

Government-planners in Jakarta view timber exports as a crucial source of royalties and revenues to finance other projects. Most of the local businessmen and overseas Chinese financiers who have become partners in the foreign timber companies prefer to see profits distributed as dividends instead of being reinvested in reforestation programs, which will not " yield income for years.

"Everything foresters talk about has been happening in Kalimantan in disastrous proportions," says Charles Lankester, senior forestry adviser for the United Nations Development Project. "It's a calamitous denuding of forests with a loss of soil fertilization and water. Companies like Weyerhaeuser are beginning to show the way in responsible forest management in large-scale operations.

The image of the ugly American multi-national is not a correct one. The real problem is fly-by-night operators who are heavily financed from outside and well equipped with buil-

That an unprecedented timber boom is under way here is obvious. Flying over eastern Kalimantan, a traveler looks down on logging roads winding through the tropical canopy and rafts of logs floating down rivers on their way to waiting coastal freighters.

One mile downstream from the provincial capital of Samarinda, on the wide, pewter-colored Mahakam River, -hundreds of logs of meranti, a mahogany-like wood, wait to be processed at the new plywood mill of Georgia Pacific, the American timber company.

The logging boom has lured many off-islanders to east Kalimantan. Newcomers from Sulawlesi across the Makassar Strait have followed the new logging roads and burned down thousands of acres along them for their temporary farming

Horror stories abound about what goes on farther up the Mahakam River, in the wilderness where native Dayak and Kutai fishing people lived for centuries in a delicate balance with the tropical wildlife — with thousands of species of birds, rare orchids, orangutang and tarsier monkeys.

According to forestry experts and conservationists who have penetrated deep into the interior, logging already has inflicted extensive damage - some of it perhaps permanent The main culprits appear to be Japanese, Korean, overseas Chinese and Indonesian timber companies operating with shortterm concessions.

John Blower of the World Wildlife Federation in Bogor. Indonesia, says that although the timber companies harvest only 10 or 12 marketable species occupying as little as 30 per cent of a typical acre, another 20 to 30 per cent of the stand may be damaged when these choice trees are removed.

Travelers report seeing river banks stripped for miles and trees cut smaller than the legal minimum of a 20-inches (51 cms) diameter. Lumber rafts reportedly have been bijacked as they float downstream, and Weyerhaeuser officials say moonlight operators have stolen thousands of trees off the company's concession.

This hectic commercial activity is an outgrowth of far off events, particularly the housing boom in Japan and the onset of timber shortages and stricter environmental controls over forestry in North America and Europe.

In the 1960s, the trends caused the international tember companies - the "multipulps" - to start eyeing the 2.4 billion acres (960 million hectares) of Hardwood forest in the world's rainy tropical belt. In Asia this wood, suitable for construction lumber, furniture, panelling and ships, stood close to the growing Japanese market and the plywood plants and sawmills of South Korea and Taiwan.

The rising cost of imported oil, food and other commodities was an incentive to poor countries to invite foreign capital and technology to exploit their untapped timber reserves to pay for these imports. Although Indonesia, for example, has 3 per cent of the world's proven oil reserves, its food import bill runs close to $1 billion.

This is about equal to its timber export revenues, which have shot to $1 billion from only $100 million in 1970. Tropical Hardwood also has become one of the fastest growing exports of other developing countries, providing about as much earnings as sugar, cotton and copper. Until 1967, the Indonesian timber industry was under state control. There was little logging in Kalimantan Most timber operations involved teak in Java. But in 1967, the new military government of President Suharto changed course and opened up the economy to foreign investment The structure of the timber industry that subsequently developed relied on foreign companies or local Chinese capital, but influential businessmen with ties to the government were brought in as "partners." There was a scramble for control of Kalimantan's hardwoods - one of the largest reserves in Southeast Asia. Concessions were awarded amid widespread reports of political-

Weyerhaeuser officials acknowledge that Weyerhaeuser came somewhat late to reforestation — and when it did so, it was under the economic pressure of policy changes ordered by the Indonesian government.

Today, however, a visit to the company's plantation, reachable only by speedboat departing from the coastal port of Balik Papan, leaves no doubt that Weyerhaeuser has indeed poured money into reforestation, as well as into facilities and amenities for its 1,200 workers.

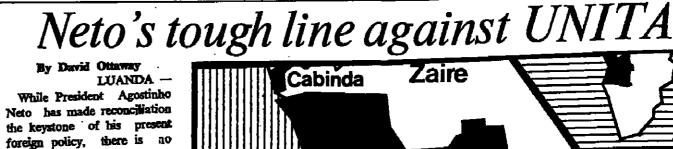

But for all the hopeful signs, Weyerhaeuser has run into a complicated series of political, commercial, biological and social problems that have made the future uncertain.

Company officials acknowledge that its its partners and some parts of the government in Jakarta are lukewarm to the program, although officials of the ministry of forestry say they are enthusiastic.

Finance ministry officials are stressing the need to accelerate the cutting and export of logs. For instance, starting in 1976, Weyerhaeuser was asked to increase its annual cut to 1.4 million cubic meters.

"In dealing with our Indonesian friends we sometimes find ourselves in the odd situation of arguing on behalf of Indonesia's long-term national interests," said one timber company

In what could be read as an implied warning to Indonesia. the World Bank has noted that "the failure to adopt a controlled forestry policy is attributable to a lack of political will reflecting both a short-sighted view and a long-established attitude toward forests." (WP)

Controversy still persists in Washington and other Western capitals whether it was principally Savimbi's fault that thousands of Cuban troops came to Angola just after independence in November 1975. The dispatch of such a large Cuban military contingent to Africa became, and has remained, a major obstacle to improved relations between Cuba and the United States as well as to American diplomatic recognition of the Neto government.

Aithough Savimbi was aided by the Central Intelligence Agency during the civil war and struggle for power here at independence, Neto says he is now ready and desirous to establish ties with the United

But he has rejected both the American demand that the Cuban troops be sent home or a political settlement with UNITA as preconditions for U.S. recognition.

Asked about the possibility of a national reconciliation between his government and UNITA, Neto was categorical in his answer to a group of American reporters accompanying Sen. George McGovern on his recent visit here:

"UNITA is group which is directed by South Africa and provided with its munitions and uniforms by South Africa. It was UNITA that brought the South Africans here when they invaded Angola. They are traitors to our country. So we cannot have reconciliation."

The deep bitterness that persists between the Neto government and UNITA even until today, nearly two years after the formal end of the civil war, is thus understandable. Furthermore, UNITA remains one of the main causes of Angola's present-day economic difficulties.

Australia skittles England for 152

SYDNEY, Australia Jan. 6 (AP) - Graham Yallop's young Australian team had a chance of squaring the Ashes series Saturday after the first day of the fourth Test against England at the Sydney Cricket Ground

A sustained boiling performance backed up by some magnificent fielding saw England bundled out for a pairry first innings score of 152.

At stumps Australia was one for 56 in this first innings with Rick Darling on 35 and Kim Hughes on 15.

The Australian's went into the test trailing one-two in the series and all week have been working up to a fever pitch for

Yallop dismissed the performance lightly, saying, "It's too early to say if we're in a winning position but I'd rather be in ours than theirs." It was big Victorian paceman Alan Hurst who broke the heart of the English batting line-up.

He was called into the attack early when Rodney Hogg had trouble with a boot and immediately set about worrying the England batsmen.

He found the edge of opener Geoff Boycott's bat giving allan border at second slip a simple catch, to dismiss him Two balls later Derek Randall attempted to hook a short delivery and Graeme Wood plucked the ball out of the air. Engand two for 18. It was left to Somerset all-rounder lan Botham to save some pride for his side.

Botham hammered over 50 runs including seven fours to start a mini England revival. But just as it seemed he was ready to take the bowling a part he attempted a hook shot off Rodney Hogg and snicker the ball to stand-in keeper Yallop took the gloves when John MacLean left the field complaining of numbness in the hands.

MacLean has been taking drugs to get the swelling out of an eye injury he sustained at practice Thursday afternoon, Hurst finished with a Test career best of five for 28 off 10.6 overs and was ably backed up by Jim Higgs' three for

English captain Mike Brearley had no reason to smile Saturday night even though he appeared set to get himself out of the batting doldrums when he ground his way to 17 in

$1 billion too much alleged

U.S. price suit charges oil firms

(AP) - The United States government has accused nine major oil companies of overcharges of more than $1 billion for natural gas liquids, a source of such products as propane, butane and heating oil. In a suit filed jointly, the Energy and Justice Departments asked that the companies be ordered to refund the excess charges plus interest. "Since many of the alleged violations have continued beyond the period covered by the (government) audit and are in some cases continuing today, the total of these alleged pricing violations will certainly exceed $1 billion," the Energy Department said in a statement

The government's action includes a lawsuit filed earlier against Exxon for some $316 million. The new action, filed Friday against eight other oil refiners, alleges additional overcharges of at least $624

Defendants in the new case are Texaco, Phillips, Mobil. Amoco, Shell, Cities Service, Atlantic Richfield and Gulf. Paul Bloom, Energy Department special counsel for enforcement, said there was no accusation of criminal conduct or conspiracy on the part of the companies.

Several companies replied Friday that their pricing systems complied with "ambiguous pricing regulations" as they were generally understood, but that the department changes the interpretations and then applies the changed rules

The companies said they had been asking for further interpretation of the rules, and some said they had filed suit against the government asking for a judicial explanation of the pricing regulations.

The lawsuits accuse the companies of either charging cus- tomers.

The Agriculture Department has announced additional grain sales to China and the Soviet Union, and a package of new credit arrangements of $470 million to enable Poland and South Korea to buy American commodities.

Officials said that the Soviet Union has bought an additional 530,000 tons of corn and 140,000 tons of wheat for delivery this year.

China bought 250,000 tons of corn for 1979 delivery, the announcement said.

The new sales were reported by unidentified private exexporters. No value of the tran sactions or other details were Counting earlier purchases, the Soviet Union has now bought 875,000 tons of wheat and about 1.8 million tons of corn for delivery through Sept. 30, the end of the third year of an agreement calling for it to make regular purchases of American wheat and corn.

The agreement allows Russia to buy a minimum of six million tons of wheat and corn combined each year. It bought about 14.8 million tons

No such agreement exists with China, but it has bought about 4.4 million tons of wheat and 2.9 million tons of corn since resuming American grain purchases in 1978 after a four-year absence in American market.

China has also bought American cotton, soybeans and soybean oil for delivery through this year.

said thousands had been killed and injured in the past two months alone, "Etelaat" reported an incident in Tehran's Lavizan barracks last month in which it said 72 soldiers were killed in the officers' mess by dissident troops.

The Shah meanwhile appointed a new martial law governor for Tehran, Gen. Mehdi Rahimi, to replace army com-Oveisi, who resigned and went abroad last week after failing to persuade the Shah to crack down harder on street protests against him.

Gen. Rahimi immediately ordered a two-hour cut in the overnight curfew in force here since martial law was imposed lest September. It will now start at 11 p.m. instead of 9

In Paris, meanwhile, Khomeini Saturday denounced the new government as "usurping and illegal," and urged his followers to fight for its downfall. "Continue your struggle," he urged Iranians in a communique from the suburban Paris villa where he is exiled "Do not hesitate for an instant, or the blood spilled until now for Islam and liberty will be lost."

The statement was much tougher than a Khomeini communique a few hours earlier which stopped short of demandmander General Gholamali ing Bakhtiar's overthrow. In the earlier statement the religious leader said it was for the people to decide the fate of the new regime,

But in his second communique he charged: "the monarchic regime is allegal, the chambers non-representative and the government usurping and ille-
